M&A INSIGHT

M&A Activity In The SaaS Space

Mergers and acquisitions activity in the software sector has remained active over the last several years, with significant deal activity across key verticals including security, DevOps, data management, and analytics. The activity remains underscored by strong fundamental drivers, including persistent demand for software – especially software-as-a-service (SaaS) -- products from customers in key verticals including healthcare, industrial operations, communication services, and logistics. In the third quarter of 2024, M&A activity in the Software-as-a-Service (SaaS) sector experienced a slight uptick from the previous quarter. AI and machine learning integration in healthcare accounted for a significant share of the total transactions during this period.

The quarter was marked by high-value acquisitions, led by public strategic acquirers, aiming to enhance technological and operational capabilities, expand product offerings, acquire talent, and pursue market consolidation. Globally, the SaaS vertical is projected to grow from $318 billion in 2024 to $908 billion by 2030, at a CAGR of 18.7%, according to Fortune Business Insights, reflecting the significant growth opportunities for SaaS companies. This growth aligns with the sector's historical expansion.

M&A deal volume in Q3 2024 continued to post improvement from previous quarters, increasing 39.2% compared to Q3 2023 and by 2% from the prior quarter. The average deal size remains significantly higher than pre-2022 levels. While strategic investors continued to account for most transactions, this quarter also saw a sequential dip in buyouts by private equity firms. This trend reflects strong potential, increased consolidation among industry players, and broader market momentum, even as financial buyers continue to show a higher degree of conservatism.

M&A INSIGHT

By: Kyle Rutz
Director

Despite the sector's strong growth, SaaS companies continue to grapple with uncertainties including the Fed's interest rate trajectory, challenges in scaling customer success operations to keep pace with rapid client onboarding, maintaining high satisfaction in a competitive market, and integrating emerging technologies like AI to deliver personalized customer experiences. Still, as M&A multiples for SaaS companies have stabilized, we continue to see strong outcomes for both buyers and sellers and a vibrant market with significant room for growth.

Several key trends have emerged in the M&A landscape:

- Surge in DevOps & IT Management: The quarter highlights the importance of streamlining IT processes in a cloud-driven world with a surge in DevOps acquisitions. These platforms help enterprises optimize their operations, automate workflows, and manage cloud infrastructure. The acquisition of WrapStream by Confluent in September 2024 exemplifies this trend. This acquisition allows Confluent to use WarpStream's cloud-native solution to fill out its portfolio by offering a new service (Confluent WarpStream) that can sit in between its fully managed Confluent Cloud and self-managed Confluent Platform.
- Vertical SaaS Solutions: The increased demand for vertical SaaS platforms in healthcare, financial services, hospitality, and agricultural analytics reflects a strong interest in industry-specific solutions. These acquisitions highlight the trend of tailored tools designed to enhance sector-specific operations. A prime example is the acquisition of Book4Time by Agilysys in August 2024. The acquisition extends the overall global presence for Agilysys, consolidates market leadership in spa management software, and creates further subscription revenue growth opportunities. Another example is Healwell AI's acquisition of VeroSource Solutions in July 2024, to strengthen its expertise and allow seamless access and interaction with healthcare data through VeroSource's cloud-based platform.

M&A INSIGHT

- Cybersecurity and Cloud Protection on the Rise: Continuing a trend from previous quarters, Q3 2024 saw strong demand for cybersecurity and data protection solutions aimed at safeguarding against cyber threats, securing cloud environments, and managing data privacy. The acquisition of the Own Company by Salesforce in September 2024 underscores this trend. It enables Salesforce to accelerate the growth of its platform data security, privacy, and compliance products by investing more deeply in pure cloud-native data protection solutions.

In conclusion, the software M&A landscape is expected to remain vibrant, driven by the continuous evolution of technology and the need for companies to stay competitive. The positive trend observed so far in 2024 is likely to continue, with more companies exploring M&A as a strategic tool for growth and innovation. Financial buyers may provide the next leg of growth for the sector's M&A, with private equity sitting on near-record dry powder, according to S&P Global, easing monetary and broader policy uncertainties entering 2025, and continued strong fundamental performance of SaaS companies. As the market evolves, we can expect to see more high-value transactions and strategic consolidation, further shaping the future of the software industry.

Q3 2024 Software Market Performance

Software market acquisitions in Q3 2024 highlight a significant upward trend compared to the same quarter over the past five years. The number of transactions for the year indicates overall healthy activity. Projections for 2024 suggest this positive trend will continue and most likely surpass 2023 levels. The fluctuations in transaction volumes underscore the dynamic nature of the SaaS sector, shaped by strategic acquisitions and evolving market trends.

The following chart shows a 6-year comparison of average multiples for sectors associated with the Software industry. This view presents both public and private multiples for reference. The private sector numbers are calculated based on quarterly M&A transactions for past 6 years for Software companies.
